HEARST CASTLE®

In 1919, Newspaper publisher William Randolph Hearst hired San Francisco architect Julia Morgan to build a hilltop house on what he called his "ranch at San Simeon." Their collaboration on the project lasted from 1919 to 1947. Morgan designed this Mediterranean Revival estate and filled it with art and antiques from Hearst's vast collection. Hearst formally named the estate "La Cuesta Encantada" (The Enchanted Hill). Today, Hearst Castle is a California State Park, which, for more than 50 years, has shared the Castle's story with millions of visitors. California State Parks welcomes you to explore the beauty and history of this enchanted place.

1. The Neptune Pool

The Neptune Pool was named for the Roman God of the Sea. A 17th century Italian statue of Neptune is incorporated into the temple facade, the focal point of the pool. The temple is a composite structure that was built using a variety of materials including Roman columns from the 1st-4th centuries (C.E.). The pool was constructed between 1924-1936 and is the last of 3 different pools that existed on this site. This final version is 104 feet (32 meters) long and ranges in depth from 3-10 feet (1-3 meters). The Neptune Pool was heated on occasion for Hearst and his guests using oil-burning heaters. While the pool is no longer heated, it is still filtered using a sand filtration system.

2. Esplanade

In 1924 Hearst wrote of the Esplanade, "(it) seems to give a finished touch to the big house." As you walk the Esplanade you might see fuchsia, azaleas in the spring, a variety of palm trees and citrus trees, trailing lantana and boxwood hedges. Coast Live Oaks, which are native to the area, can also be found along the Esplanade. In some instances, Hearst planned the buildings around the location of the Oaks and in others the entire root system of the Oaks were dug up and the trees were re-located to make way for the construction.

3,4,5. The Cottages

The Cottages are (3) Casa del Mar (House of the Sea), (4) Casa del Sol (House of the Sun) and (5) Casa del Monte (House of the Mountains). Each cottage was named for its view, which Hearst considered a great feature of the hilltop. The cottages were the first buildings constructed and were used to house guests and family. Hearst's family occupied Casa del Mar until 1928 at which time he moved into Casa Grande. All 3 cottages contain bedrooms, bathrooms and sitting rooms. None of the little houses have kitchens or dining areas; instead, guests were required to go to the main house for their meals.

6. Sekhmet

These representations of the Egyptian Goddess Sekhmet are among the oldest pieces of art at the Castle. The upper seated figure and the small bust on the right are more than 3,000 years old. The other two pieces are undated.

7. Casa Grande

Casa Grande's design follows the general Mediterranean Revival Style of the rest of the estate with the primary focus found in the architecture of Southern Spain. The design precedent for Casa Grande's bell towers came from a cathedral in Rhonda Spain and overall the structure has a church-like appearance. It is made of poured concrete reinforced with steel and is approximately 68,500 square feet (6300 square meters). It contains 115 rooms including 38 bedrooms, a library, movie theater, kitchen, and living quarters for the household staff.

8. North Unfinished Terrace

Plans for a Grand Entrance on this site were underway by the late 1920s. The larger concrete structure was poured on top of existing staircases and terraces that Hearst found inadequate as the rest of the construction project grew larger and more elaborate. Marble statues were to sit inside a fountain on the lower level; however, they were never installed. Like a number of other locations at the Castle, the North Unfinished Terrace sits unfinished.

9. Tennis Courts and Indoor Roman Pool

The tennis courts sit atop the indoor swimming pool and form a portion of what was to be the Recreation Building. Hearst once wrote to Morgan that the tennis courts "are the most used of the amusement features of the Ranch." Glass skylights were installed in 1935 on the courts and help bring more natural light into the Roman Pool below. The indoor Roman Pool design consists of more than a million Murano glass tiles, some of which contain a layer of gold leaf inside. The main basin of the pool is 81 feet (25 meters) long and 10 feet (3 meters) deep. The Pool is the most completed portion of the Recreation Building, which was also intended to house dressing rooms and squash courts.
